A standing collar with a Rhime stone button and buckskin scarf, so made as to spring around the neck as set forth in designs accompanying application for patent, and held down by weights in such a manner as to prevent collar from climbing over head, will be used at the same time. Both collars and cuffs will be made with buttonholes, so that a shirt may be buttoned on while in use—if it can be borrowed. These garments will be worn by American authors in case an international copyright law should be deemed inadvisable. European authors will have to economize also, but whether they will squander their royalty on such gaudy trappings as collars and bread remains to be seen. A literary friend of mine, writing from England, says that unless speedy justice is done to authors on his side of the Atlantic his cesture hereafter will consist of a small haversack of stuff to throw in the eyes of the police.

But I forget, Lacretia, that you were not inquisitive about celluloid only.

London, May 18.—John Walter, chief proprietor of The Times, has written as fol-lows in answer to a query by Mr. Wm. II. Hurlbert, the American journalist, whether real value of American sympathy with Mr public meetings and in other forms is greatly overrated in this country. These who have seen as much of Amer-ica as I have will, of course, discount it very ica as I have will, of course, discount it vary carefully. They are not likely to mistake the noisy demonstrations of the purely Irish element in the population of your great cities for the expressions, after calm mag-ment, of the American people of a people who e every watchwords are union law and liberty, and who have on some memorable arguments more forcible than pleasant. The fact is that the Irish both here and in the United States are in the habit of exaggerating their numbers and influence until they really believe in their own fiction. Last year, when traveling in Ireland, I was gravely informed by a Nationalist reporter that the Irish home rulers had 20,000,000 of Irish in America to back them, I see by the report of Saturday night's debate that Mr. John Dillen reduces this number to 10,000,000; but this I take to be a gross example attention, and I wish giving a moderate heat and ventilation for the house.
